Oral Hygiene is Key to Overall Health

Good oral hygiene is a key part of maintaining overall health. Oral health symptoms can indicate more serious conditions in other parts of the body, including heart disease, diabetes, and chronic infections. Periodontal disease causes swollen, inflamed gums, and can enter the bloodstream and contribute to plaque buildup in the arteries. Studies have found that plaque buildup can increase the risk of heart attack or stroke, block blood flow, and contribute to respiratory and cardiovascular infections.

When gums are swollen and infected, they are more susceptible to gathering bacteria and causing other infections. These bacteria can cause potentially dangerous respiratory illnesses, such as bronchitis and pneumonia, and even lead to long-term health problems. In addition, poor oral health can even play a role in dementia, infertility, kidney disease, cancer, and rheumatoid arthritis. To maintain good oral hygiene, it is important to brush and floss your teeth every day, regularly visit the dentist, and avoid smoking and other tobacco products. Our pharmacist can also recommend quality nutritional supplements that support oral health, such as vitamin A and calcium. Ask us how we can help you maintain your oral health.

Customized Medications to Enhance Dental Care

Compounding pharmacists can work with dentists and their patients to prepare options to help perform routine dental procedures comfortably. Modern procedures now render most dental therapies "painless" – even the once-dreaded root canal. Customized medications can be compounded in strengths, flavors, and dosage forms that are not commercially available to further enhance patient comfort and provide solutions to problems affecting the mouth.

Examples of customized therapies for oral health care.

“Miracle Mouthwashes” and more

Compounding allows countless active ingredients to be incorporated into customized mouthwashes, gels, troches, etc. Compounded dental mouthwashes or rinses may offer numerous advantages over commercially available dosage forms. A customized preparation can be pleasantly flavored, reduce irritation caused by alcohol in commercial products, and eliminate dyes that may stain the oral mucosa (lining of the mouth).

Treatment for Dry Mouth, Mouth Tenderness, and Infections

Loss of saliva (xerostomia) may be a side effect of some medications, is common in patients with Sjogren’s disease, and is one of the most common complaints among patients who have received radiation therapy of the head and neck, and can lead to periodontal infection, dental caries, bone loss, and poor digestion of carbohydrates. Ask us about saliva stimulants.

When a person is receiving chemotherapy or radiation, stomatitis and mucositis (mouth tenderness and infections) can interfere with the ability to eat, yet these problems can be treated (and sometimes prevented) with customized medications.

Burning Mouth Syndrome

Burning mouth is reported most often by women, especially after menopause. Burning mouth syndrome involves a burning sensation on the tongue or other areas of the mouth, usually in the absence of clinical and laboratory findings. Mouthwashes and lozenges containing low dosages of medications such as clonazepam have been effective in treating burning mouth syndrome.

Suppressing the Gag Reflex

The gag reflex can cause patients considerable discomfort as well as interfere with dental procedures. A compounded electrolyte lozenge or lollipop can be used a few minutes before the start of a procedure to suppress the gag reflex. Lozenges can be prescribed for home use for patients who cannot properly perform oral hygiene procedures due to the gagging problem.

We work together with dentists, hygienists, and their patients to customize medications that enhance dental care.
